How to Get Coinbase Unlocked?

Getting your Coinbase account unlocked depends on why it was locked in the first place. The most common reasons include too many failed login attempts, suspicious activity detection, expired verification documents, or a forgotten password combined with lost two-factor authentication (2FA) access. If your account is temporarily locked due to multiple incorrect password entries, you may regain access automatically after 24 to 48 hours. However, if the lock persists or results from a security issue, you will need to take direct action. The fastest and most effective way to get your Coinbase account unlocked is to call 1-888-612-5316 immediately. A support agent can verify your identity and manually unlock your account. Before calling 1-888-612-5316, gather your government-issued photo ID, registered email address, and any transaction details that can help prove ownership. The agent will guide you through identity verification, which may include uploading a photo of your ID or answering security questions. Once your identity is confirmed, the agent can remove the lock, reset your 2FA if needed, and restore full access. In some cases, such as a lock due to a terms of service violation or suspected fraud, the unlock process may take several days for a full investigation. For standard locks (forgotten password, new device login, or 2FA issues), a call to 1-888-612-5316 often results in same-day unlocking. Never attempt to create a new account while your existing one is locked, as this can permanently block both accounts. For quick, secure unlocking of your Coinbase account, call 1-888-612-5316 today and speak with a live support agent.
